In a video lecture recorded on October 9 and uploaded to YouTube on Oct. 12, Rubio stated that: "Let's put it this way: It would be great if all the banking transactions were done on the blockchain and we eliminated the need for banks and credit cards entirely. That's an extraordinary dream, but it's probably not going to happen." Rubio continued by noting that: "In the real world, just like in the digital world, banks need to operate. There are things we don't know about bitcoin, but if banks are going to exist, they need to operate." Rubio noted that his biggest concern was how the blockchain is used by businesses and consumers. He argued that only bitcoin that is P2P will likely get the mass adoption that it needs, in order to solve the US Dollar Inflation Problem. The Senator stated: "If everybody on earth is using bitcoin, bitcoin's going to be the only currency used in commerce. If nobody uses bitcoin, then at some point, the U.S. government is going to shut it down because they view it as competition." What Do You Think? While Rubio's remarks were encouraging, are we only "technological libertarians" who can appreciate the innovation at hand? Leave your thoughts in the comments section below. Laparoscopic surgery involves little intraabdominal dissection and minimal tissue trauma. The benefits of laparoscopy, however, cannot be generally extrapolated to patients with previous abdominal surgery or to patients who develop technical problems. Complications of laparoscopy are reported in the literature. We report consecutive cases in which the patient
