Experiences of a new survey tool to evaluate pain in patients with terminal cancer: a systematic review. To evaluate the utility of the Patient-reported Outcome Measurement Information System (PROMIS) Cancer Pain Short Form (CPSF) to collect data on terminal cancer pain. Systematic review. PROMIS. We performed a systematic review of the literature to evaluate the utility of the PROMIS CPSF in collecting terminal cancer pain data. Fourteen studies were identified. The majority of terminal cancer patients have pain due to treatment (83%) and the mean pain score at its worst was 4.7 on a 0-10 numeric rating scale. PROMIS is a reliable, valid, and responsive measure of pain and can be used in terminal cancer patients. This will permit enhanced collection of longitudinal data about pain within the context of terminal cancer care..What a weird game of guessing. Yes, the steelcase, ridged up half-way. You don't need to see the right thing to know the meaning of the left. The answer of the church has been obvious. To them the doors on the outside of the church are invisible. When people have a narrow mind, it's hard for them to see the difference between being in and being out. As they say, I try to keep the right side up and put my left side down. V. The church is where the servants of God meet. For the believing servant, the true-believing servant, the church is a life of love, a life of joy, a life of community, a life of service. The church is very diverse. It is a place where the culture of the world meets that of the kingdom of God. It is where the weird church meets the normal church. The normal church is perfect in thought and perfect in practice. The normal church gives every thing it has to the service of Jesus and lives like Jesus lived. The greatest miracle Jesus ever worked was that he brought to earth another way of thinking. But the normal church doesn't know that. The church is the place where the true-believing servant meets the confused-not-believing servant. The church is the place where the servant of God takes his eyes off his heavenly home and loves people at their level. The church can be very competitive and full of weirdness

What's New In?

Jemele Hill and Michael Bennett will be at the BET Awards to give a joint on-air statement. The long-in-the-making joint interview will air during Sunday's BET Awards, Hill told Variety. Hill and Bennett have faced a lot of heat for their outspoken comments regarding race in the NFL. Hill caused a major stir over the weekend when she tweeted that President Donald Trump was a "white supremacist" and that fans should boycott the NFL if players didn't continue to protest in a way that made it clear who they don't think is American enough to be playing in the National Football League. Bennett had a similar tweet, but it got more controversy than Hill's. After dozens of players took a knee during the national anthem at their respective NFL games on Sept. 24, Bennett said, "I can't stand by and stand idle. ... If I see instances where I feel like there's injustices going on, to me, I can't just stand there and look the other way. I can't do it." Bennett was ultimately fined $31,500 by the NFL. He and Hill weren't the only players fined. The NFL also put the teams of several players on notice that they could be fined. On Sunday, Bennett and Hill used the NBA, which no longer has the same racial issues that the NFL does, as an example. "Look at the NBA. It's the same exact thing," Bennett said. "All of a sudden, they're speaking out. And the same thing that happened with me. I'm not gonna be a hypocrite. ... I have a platform, so I'm gonna use it. "It's all about making sure we have the right representation in the NFL, and that's what we're working on. That's what we're doing. It's bigger than just football. It's bigger than just the National Football League." Hill said the reason she and Bennett are being penalized for speaking out is because NFL players have the ability to speak out on social media, and the NFL has a lot of money. "When we were silent, it didn't matter. We got fined $100
